Jeremy Weaver 5.0 out of 5 stars It was a step up for me at the time from drip brewed coffee. This Heihox manual grinder made by Xihong just replaced my aging Hario. Its astoundingly better. Astonishingly great. The body is milled from a solid piece of aluminum. Tight, high quality bearings support the turning shaft to eliminate wobble and make a freakishly consistent grind. A long crank handle, making grinding effortless, topped with a walnut wood hand grip. A stepped, ball detent, brass grind size selector. And the crowning glory, a hand ground 420 stainless steel burr of professional, nay museum, quality. The grind experience is chill inducing. Buttery smooth. Like walking on a fresh layer of dry snow on a brilliant sunny winter morning. Thats just stupidly good. I dont know how long the sale will last, but do yourself a favor and buy it if the thought of buying a coffee grinder has recently wafted through your brain I am not benefitting in any way from this review. Im just amped up about getting something of such high quality for a price that feels like stealing.The top bean catch is a one piece metal unibody that includes the shaft braces. Very precise and sturdy. The crank shaft and the burr rod appear to be steel and they turn very precisely thanks to the help of some bearings. The actual burrs are solid and very sharp. They appear to be a traditional style burr. If I had to guess, most of this grinder is very similar to the very well reviewed Helor 101. Grind quality was fairly great and it was easy to get to a correct coarseness for both espresso and my Hario V60 single cup pour over. The one downside is in the clicking stepped mechanism to adjust the grind size. The actual click felt a little cheap. In fact, I had trouble with the grinder slipping out of the setting I had placed it in. Was very disappointed in this as the rest of the grinder is great. Maybe you will have better luck!

It feels great in my hands and grinds your lovely highend hipster beans like they are butter. You will not regret it.Ive been using the cheaper hand grinders for about 2 years, replacing them about every 6 months because the plastic parts do not hold up. When my third one started to wear out, I decided it was time for an upgrade. Since this grinder boasted all steel parts, I thought it was built to last. I will never find out because it was not made to perform. I grind my coffee every morning and use a French press. This grinder claims to have multiple settings from coarse to fine, but Ive only been able to get fine grounds. The setting does not seem to change no matter how much I turn the tuning knob. It eventually falls apart if I turn it too far, and its quite difficult to reassemble. Another problem the grinder does not hold as many beans as the cheaper grinder AND it takes 3x longer to grind. I am returning this disappointment. Its sad because it looks and feels so nice, but it does not do the job.I wanted a manual grinder with metal burrs. I also wanted it to work well for a coarse grind, and this one delivers. I found that 30 clicks to the left worked well for French press brewing see pics for grind with 20, 20, and 30 clicks. The hopper is large enough to accommodate a full 30g of beans for my 4cup French Press see pic. I love how easily the handle mechanism snaps in place, thanks to the magnet. My only complaint is that the oring makes it a little tight to remove the cup that catches the grounds. And ideally the price would be a little lower, since this is an offbrand item.It literally loosens itself while its spinning during grinding and frequently you have to open it and put it back together after cleaning up a mess. This is really the dumbest design ever made.Just unbelievable. I would give zero stars if possible.There's an oring where the grounds cup attaches to the body; no grounds leak out at all.

I use it for espresso, a very fine grind, and it produces better results than my electric burr grinder. The finer the grind, the longer it takes to do the grinding. For espresso, I'd say I crank for maybe 5 minutes to get grinds for two shots. In order to navigate out of this carousel please use your heading shortcut key to navigate to the next or previous heading. Delfino Programmable Coffee maker.
